

Yee Haw

Group gathers in a circle. The game starts with a "yee-haw" going around in a circle (a fist comes down and across your body pointing the direction you wish the yee-haw to travel) If someone looks the wrong direction or on the wrong side says yeehaw then they are out. They can then stand on the outer rim of the circle and talk into anyone's ear to try to mess them up. As the game goes, you introduce new actions such as "pole barn" the action is to put your arms up above your head and say "pole barn" this then skips the person standing beside you and moves on to the next person in line. Next is "Down little Doggie" the action is to point across the circle to someone and the action skips to that person. The last action is recommended for very advanced groups, or groups who will play this game frequently. This action is "four shifter gear box." When it is a person's turn to perform they yell "four shifter gear box!" The group must then all say "1-2-3-4" together (on the rythym) and make the motion of shifting gears. It is then the last person's turn who said, "down little doggie."
